

Firmly in the Grey: Questionable Internet practices and how to attack (or defend) them...

Although the Federal Anti-Cybersquatting Laws have placed the practice of domain name hijacking clearly in the "illegal" category, there are a number of other relatively common Internet business practices that can be attacked (if at all) only indirectly by using legal theories that were developed in other contexts.

During his presentation, Terry L. Watt from the firm Fellers, Snider, Blankenship, Bailey and Tippens, P.C. will talk about a few examples of Internet behavior that fall in the "gray" area. Mr. Watt will also discuss how courts have struggled to find laws applicable to the unique problems that arise in Internet settings.
